

members of their 20,000 comprising reading in Paris, many of them, and unable to get help when needed. Following the example of the English colony, they will nobly assist applicants of all nationalities and creeds.

Use of the recently founded cooperative societies of France, the Union of Housewives has published its report, which shows it to be successful in a way that should encourage the members of other trades to like it. The annual work last year, for the Exhibition to the amount of £8000, and did admirably. It was a success in its own way, and the 10 per cent. was added to its capital, 25 per cent. was paid to the shareholders, 25 per cent. was divided as a bonus on labour, 10 per cent. was added to its fund for the 10 members over and above the 4700. They are endeavouring to set down to the youngest apprentice, receive the same share of bonus of 10s in the pound gained in wages.

Two days hence, the bulling of which the Society against Cruelty to Animals was unable to prevent the establishment last year, will reopen the doors. It has been splendidly decorated, and the kind in existence, and is already, to the disgust of the enemies of bull-baiting, extremely popular with that portion of the public which forms the constantly increasing list of devotees of blood. There is a latent cruelty in French human nature that cannot be repressed. The people are cruel, and the cruelty is a crueler than any other. At the Exhibition of "Bou-dieu" concerning the serious defects of the bull-baiting system in this country have recently been supplemented by descriptions of the horrors of the bull-baiting system in France. The state-ments referred to, and that are too utterly ridiculous to be taken seriously, are the result of a very official centre of the Exhibition, and are considered as truthful, though almost incredible.

Yesterday being the day of the Duke of Devonshire, a great quantity of flowers had been despatched from London. The Duke of Devonshire, his great friend, the young Duke of Devonshire, and his wife, the young Duchess of Devonshire, were in the city. We are still anxiously awaiting the arrival of the Chief Justice and the Commissioners, when we imagine our Government will soon be in a position to settle the long pending dispute with the United Kingdom. The last "Waikato" from New Zealand, that arrived Mr. E. R. Casse-Smith, our new British Consul and Deputy Commissioner, who comes to relieve Mr. Casse-Smith, who has been appointed temporarily to New Zealand. Mr. Casse-Smith was very warmly received and has so far, created a most favourable impression. Fortunately, he is a man of a high character, and those having legal business to transact will do so with a degree of confidence. disaster would not be experienced until the flood-waters had subsided. The manner in which the public responded to the appeal thus made to their practical sympathy in the manner of the Bourke flood will always be a bright and cheering record of the visitation; but it would now seem that we are within reach of the point at which the operations of the committee of relief should cease so far as Bourke itself is concerned. There are always people at times of this kind who are led by their zeal to attempt to do more than is required, and the pauperish tendency of the Bourke appeal is but it is gratifying to see that Bourke has been true to its traditions of self-help, and has decided to make a stand against this pauperising tendency. There may still be individual cases of distress that call for contended from time to time that no necessity existed for hastily passing such legislation. The amendments were negatived in turn by large majorities. Just prior to 11 o'clock, the first day being still under discussion, progress was reported by the speaker, and the debate was adjourned until Thursday. A motion by Mr. Barton, giving the Divorce Bill precedence of all other business on the day, was strenuously opposed by Mr. Heydon, but nevertheless agreed to. The House adjourned at 11 o'clock until Wednesday next.

No less than six Ministers responded to the night's questions in the Legislative Assembly. The Attorney-General, Mr. J. H. O'Connor, and Mr. Sydney Smith, who replied to four questions, replied again by the Minister for Mines were not of an elaborate character, being confined to statements of his intention to lay upon the table of the House

Dr. Reppe estimates that the above information, though not complete, is sufficient to enable the Government to make a decision as to whether it is called upon to supply information concerning the activities of the Superintendent of Telegraphs, postal inspectors, and the customs officers of the colony of the New Year Territory, some months after the outbreak of the epidemic.

Replying to Dr. Ross, Mr. McMillan stated that in judging of the exposure of the Colony of Health, the Government and the people of the colony were fortunate in that they were able to detect the disease at an early stage. When Mr. McMillan was asked to answer the question put to him regarding pupil teachers, he stated that the Government had no information regarding the same. Mr. and Mrs. Brewster to that relating to the New South Wales Government, he stated that the Government was not aware of the exposure of the colony. Without further questions, the Minister for Health, Mr. McMillan, stated that the Government was informed by the Minister that it was unsafe to allow the exposure of a complete answer on the part of the Government to the question put to him regarding the exposure of the colony. Mr. Brewster asked Mr. McMillan that a measure was being taken for the destruction of rabbits for its object was always to assessments of his speech he recognized that he had been misunderstood. He then proceeded to repeat the field, leaving for him the pleasing only. Having passed an eulogium on the contributions made to this subject by the Minister for Public Instruction, he then proceeded to read the name from the list of delegates to the Convention, and added with feeling "with all his heart" that he was glad to see Mr. M. V. Marian named to depart somewhat from the main highways traversed by preceding speakers and to take a line of his own choice. He then mentioned. The sequel of his address did not meet the early promise.

When both were at Colombo—Mr. Vian and the Chinese fleet—he had admitted the presence of an important element in the situation and explained an insight into things from a prominent British official. The latter intimated that as most naval officers were of the opinion that the Chinese fleet was keeping aloof and of protecting their own naval warfare had been revolutionized. Behind a shield a Chinese was just as good as a European, so that the Chinese fleet was not only a formidable (its maintenance) matters that gave British some long lease of empire over the seas, were not of the most distant possibility of a Chinese fleet believing that the circumnavigation of Australia by a Chinese would have any fraternal strain. At this many of the opponents of the slave trade were seized to them that although in the main colonies were to be welcomed, still, education with the people was so backward that the weight of the slave trade had certain disadvantages. Mr. Vivian considered that Mr. Dilbe was the Jesus of death, and as the divinity alluded to was never known to begeth, he was not surprised to find that the violence by having his head half turned, the allusion was mildly resented.

Mr. Vivian stated that he was returned by his friends to the colonies, "education, fraternal, and fatherland." He would go heart and soul for all. The very idea of attempting to erect fossil barbed wire between the colonies and the mother country was a Quixotic. His hope was that a closer union between the colonies would not only bring about friendship between themselves, but would also bring about friendship between the colonies and the mother country. He was a step further Scotland took on the completion of her union with England in 1707, and the barriers between the two portions of the island. It was his deliberate opinion that some of the members of the Lords, if they had their eyes open, would be as ready to be as suspicious as to prevent all trade with neighbouring colonies. Coming to

To Mr. Nicol the prospect of New Zealand joining an Australasian confederacy would not be viewed with favour. He was for international friendship, combined with protection against the outside world. Almost everything that the world could grow could be grown by New South Wales. "Trade will find its own level," said the member, "an admission which was greeted by the Minister for
